

Marketing Society Excellence Awards 2015

Category: Branded Content

Client: Warner Bros.

Contributing Agencies: PHD, Drum

THE LEGO MOVIE AD BREAK

How changing the rules of Branded Content delivered awesome results for Warner Bros.

Spoiler Alert

We're about to ruin the end of this story.

The LEGO Movie was the highest grossing movie in the UK in 2014. We wouldn't normally spoil the reveal in the first paragraph but with that fact having been a recent mainstream news story you may start this paper with the sense that this film was a success. And you'd be right.

However, it's important to understand that the movie's success wasn't pre-ordained and that positioning the movie in the right way to the right audience was critical.

And an ambitious piece of branded content sat at its heart.

THE INITIAL BUILDING BLOCKS

Back in May 2013 we started work on the launch strategy for The LEGO Movie – a collaboration between Warner Bros. and the LEGO Group in which an ordinary LEGO character called Emmet is mistaken as being the Master Builder who can save the universe.

The movie was an original story and wouldn't be based on an established LEGO franchise such as Star Wars so wouldn't come with audience knowledge 'built-in' and Emmet and Wyldstyle - The LEGO Movie's main characters (right) – were also brand new.

"SO, WE'RE LAUNCHING A KID'S ACTION MOVIE?"

At this stage, all we had was a short synopsis, a list of voiceover cast and characters, a broad box office target benchmarked against recent family animations, a sense of the visual feel of the movie and a logo.

With relatively little to go on, the first thing we did was commission some light touch quantitative research with regular cinema-goers to get their instinctive reactions to the logo. So without any other context we showed people the logo and asked people to describe the type of movie they would expect to see.

The responses (shown in the 'wordle', right) helped to frame the challenge. On the surface, people clearly expected this to be a movie for kids (and predominantly boys) and to have a sci-fi / space action feel to it.

But while useful to know this wasn't particularly what we wanted to hear.

We knew that, in order to hit box office expectations it was important for it to be seen as a film that would not only be enjoyable for all the family but would appeal to regular young adult cinema-goers too (an incremental adult audience to those who would be taking kids).

REKINDLING CHILDHOOD MEMORIES

Whilst The LEGO Movie was a new concept, for most adults LEGO itself is a hugely iconic brand – one that’s wrapped up in positive childhood nostalgia. The sentiment of “I loved LEGO when I was a kid” was played back to us consistently.

We knew that if we could channel the positive childhood memories of the wonderful things that could be made from a pile of LEGO bricks and combine them with movie cues then we’d have a powerful mechanic to engage older audiences with the movie.

So, we set out to combine the best of LEGO (playfulness, creativity and possibility) with the best of Hollywood (high quality entertainment) around a strategic approach we called ‘LEGOtainment’.

We had a unique opportunity to transport people to a unique LEGO world – and challenged ourselves to create a piece of ‘LEGOtainment’ that would capture the imagination of the nation and bring a smile to the faces of people who saw it.

To tap into ‘grown-ups’ magical LEGO memories and unlock their inner child we’d need to take something from their recognisably grown-up world and transform it through the power of LEGO.

To do that, we’d need to create our own content.

TURNING THE RULES OF BRANDED CONTENT ON THEIR HEAD.

The opening week's box office for any movie can make or break its lifetime commercial performance. That meant we couldn't do something that had a slow build. To generate the buzz we required, we needed whatever we created to noisily come to life on the largest canvas possible. This couldn't be one of those campaigns that the marketing industry loved but no-one saw.

This led us quickly to peak-time ITV. A channel which would allow us to maximise our message to the core target audience (families with younger children) and our older cinema going audience at mass.

However, ad-funded content in the UK broadcast television market is still amongst the most highly regulated in the world and would come with a significant number of hurdles to overcome.

Which got us thinking. Rather than creating expensive and highly-restricted programming content or compromising on the need for immediate, large scale impact by going online, could we use the transformative magic of LEGO to make other brands' ADVERTISING the branded content for the movie?

So, for a movie in which the whole world is made of LEGO, we set out to replicate that experience in media by re-creating four well-known existing TV ads brick-by-brick in LEGO to create THE WORLD'S FIRST ALL-LEGO TV AD BREAK.

A screenshot of a news article from Mirror TV. The article is titled "World's first entirely LEGO ad break will see TV adverts given plastic makeover during Dancing on Ice". It is dated February 07, 2014, at 13:22, and is by Rebecca Pecklington. The article text states: "To celebrate the release of The Lego Movie, the well known adverts will be re-created using the plastic figurines and shown during Dancing On Ice". Below the text is a photo of two LEGO minifigures, a woman with red hair and a man with blonde hair, sitting at a table with a laptop. To the right of the article is a sidebar with a "Pause your favourite shows" section featuring a "The Following" advertisement and a "Recommended In TV" section featuring a "Sherlock" advertisement.

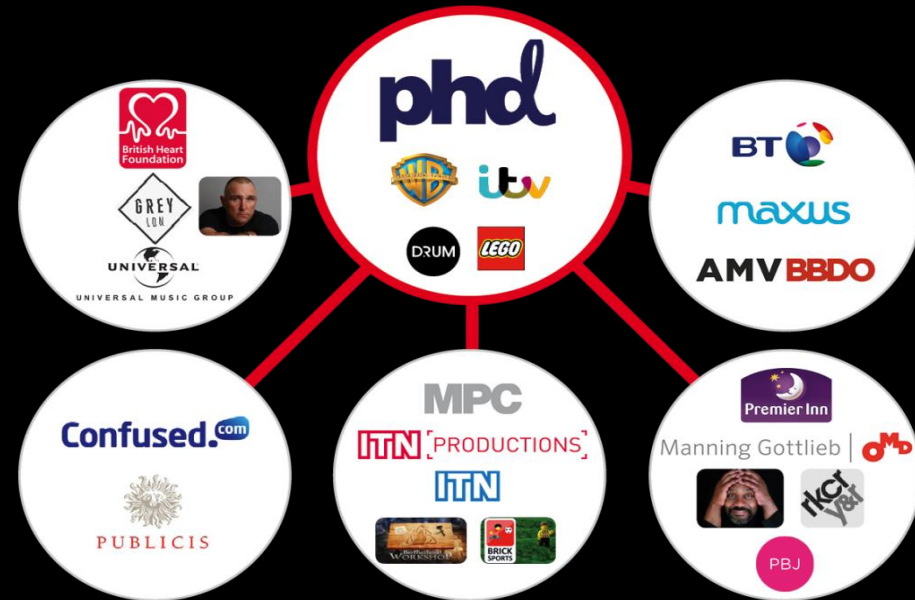

HOW WE MADE IT HAPPEN

No matter how appealing an idea is, no client on the planet – including Warner Bros. - could justify paying to remake and buy someone else's advertising. This meant this idea could only come to life if we made participation a compelling enough proposition for each of the brands involved to pay for their own media and production costs.

We did this by making participation as easy and inexpensive as possible – starting with PHD (with significant help from content agency Drum and ITV) sourcing specialist LEGO production partners and remaking all four ads themselves. Having one agency across all elements of the break's creation and media made the process simpler AND more financially viable* – resulting in all of the brands who signed up agreeing to pay for their own media and production costs, with Warner Bros. only paying for their own media.

The break took 5 months to create and deliver. Pulling it off required PHD to co-ordinate work across three countries with 23 different stakeholders (shown right), including the four participating brands, four different ad agencies, three production agencies, two other media agencies, as well as Warner Bros. and LEGO.

The result was a striking piece of branded content for the movie which, in turn, gave each brand an association with a major movie release.

* _____

_____ / <not for publication>

THE LEGO MOVIE AD BREAK

In Dancing on Ice at 7.27pm on Sunday 9th February 2014 - five days before the movie launched - ITV broadcast a world first, an ad break made entirely out of LEGO (if you'd like to watch it as it was broadcast, type "LEGO Movie ad break" into YouTube or click HERE).

Four familiar and modern UK television ads * – for the British Heart Foundation, Confused.com, BT and Premier Inn – were recreated frame by frame and brick by brick in LEGO (for context, the LEGO remakes are shown next to the original ads, right).

* To ensure that the break felt as much like real-life had been turned into LEGO as possible, it was important that the four ads were all live/recent campaigns, not remakes of classic ads of yesteryear.

PUTTING THE MOVIE INTO THE LEGO MOVIE AD BREAK

To ensure that people made the link to The LEGO Movie, not just LEGO, the ads were separated by five different 2 second "stings" featuring characters from the movie and the break ended with a 40 second trailer for The LEGO Movie itself. (examples are shown, right)

ITV also introduced the break with a voiceover informing viewers that "to celebrate a much anticipated new movie coming to cinemas, we've assembled a very special ad break". (see, below)

We suspected that unexpectedly turning peak-time ITV into LEGO would stimulate a lot of "did you just see that?" activity on social media, so as the TV ad break was transmitting, we simultaneously released the break - in full - on YouTube to ensure those who saw it could share it (and, as importantly, so those expressing regret at having missed it could be directed to join the conversation quickly.)

The four participating brands even had a form of "block party" on social media after the ad break ran where they celebrated their involvement in the break together (shown, right)

The reaction across social media was immediate and overwhelming, surpassing anything we'd hoped for, e.g. the number of #thelegomovie tweets per day increased fivefold after the break aired (a selection of social media reaction is shown below and right)

The LEGO Movie UK @TheLEGOMovieUK
After all that #DOI excitement we don't want this night to end! Who's up for a #BlockParty? #TheLEGOMovie
2 Retweets, 3 Favourites

Premier Inn @premierinn · Feb 9
@TheLEGOMovieUK We're in! Our place or yours? #GoodNightGuarantee #BlockParty

BRIAN @BRIANtheRobot · Feb 9
@premierinn @TheLEGOMovieUK Yay! I calculate that this is my first party invitation #blockparty

Clare @missisbroon · 19h
Omg. #legoadbreak the best set of adverts ever lol

Paul Beebe 20 hours ago
Best thing ever alert! To promote the new Lego movie they recreated a bunch of real adverts into Lego adverts and played them during Dancing On Ice

Barrie Tingle via Google+ 5 hours ago
Now that is an advert break I could watch more than once :)

James Masterton via Google+ 2 days ago
So this was a thing here in the UK this weekend. To promote The Lego Movie, an entire commercial break was rendered in Lego with CGI remakes of the actual adverts which would have normally aired in the slot.
The planning and co-operation which must have gone into this is breathtaking to imagine, securing the agreement of all the advertisers to have their spots remade in what is essentially a four minute plug for someone else's brand. But clearly everyone was up for it.

COSMIC Recifax via Google+ 1 day ago
#legomovie Please take over all adbreaks from now on

TURNING AN AD BREAK INTO AN ENTERTAINMENT EVENT

Nearly 6m people saw The LEGO Movie break live on TV, with an additional 1.1m seeking it out on YouTube within a week (all of these views were achieved organically with NO paid-for digital optimisation).

By making it a piece of branded entertainment in its own right, over 1 million people actively sought out a 3min 20 sec AD BREAK and watched it in its entirety. Quite an achievement in a challenging new marketing world where audiences are doing everything they can to AVOID ads.

The break also captured the imaginations of the press, where it was written about in over 60 different consumer and trade publications.

the guardian
 News US World Sports Comment Culture Business Money Environment Science Travel Tech Media Life & Style Data
 News Media Advertising
 The Lego Movie rebuilds ITV ad break
 Warner Bros jumps on trend of reimagining famous scenes with bricks by recreating ads for Premier Inn, BT and Confused.com
 Mark Sweney
 theguardian.com, Friday 7 February 2014 05:54 EST
 Jump to comments (0)
 share 26
 Email
 Print
 Office history
 Media Advertising
 Life and style Lego Toys
 UK news
 Film
 More news
 More top media articles
 On Media
 Most viewed
 Last 24 hours
 1. Suchi 2014: BBC viewers stood near Jimmy Jones broadcast commentary
 2. Public service broadcasters join forces on catch-up service for smart TVs
 3. BBC chief to move comedy shows with all-male panels
 4. Georgina Henry - a force of nature to whom I owe so much
 5. Lisa O'Carroll and Marissa: I like to write characters who are conflicted
 More most viewed
 Suchi 2014: Channel 4 responds to last year rights
 Broadcasters to change
 How much is a star's salary?

The Telegraph
 Monday 10 February 2014
 Home News World Sport Finance Comment Culture Travel Life Women Fashion Luxury Tech Dating Offers Jobs
 Film Music Art Books TV and Radio Theatre Comedy Dance Opera Photography Holy Festival Video
 TV Guide Clive James BBC Downtown Abbey Doctor Who Strictly Come Dancing X Factor Reviews Telegraph TV
 Home » Culture » TV AND RADIO
 The LEGO movie: ITV advert break to be recreated in LEGO
 An entire ITV advert break will be recreated in LEGO this Sunday to celebrate the launch of Warner Bros' film the LEGO Movie
 The BT advert will be transformed into LEGO as part of the world's first entire LEGO advert break
 The BT advert will be transformed into LEGO as part of the world's first entire LEGO advert break
 By Telegraph Reporters
 5:14PM GMT 07 Feb 2014
 Print this article
 Share 272
 Facebook 285
 Comments
 lock by block, they must have been building themselves up for a stunt

THE INDEPENDENT MONDAY 10 FEBRUARY 2014
 tomholla
 Play games or download our app DON'T MISS OUT!
 NEWS IMAGES VOICES SPORT TECH LIFE PROPERTY ARTS + ENTS TRAVEL MONEY IN Arts + Ent » TV & Radio » News
 ITV to broadcast 'all-Lego' advert break during Dancing On Ice
 The BT advert will be transformed into LEGO as part of the world's first entire LEGO advert break
 By Telegraph Reporters
 5:14PM GMT 07 Feb 2014
 Print this article
 Share 272
 Facebook 285
 Comments
 lock by block, they must have been building themselves up for a stunt

METRO
 News Sport Guilty Pleasures Entertainment Life & Style
 Entertainment TV Film Music Gaming
 Lego Lenny Henry anyone? ITV to air first ever 'all-Lego' ad break during Dancing On Ice
 Friday 7 Feb 2014 9:47 am
 193 shares
 Share on Facebook
 Share on Twitter
 Caroline Westbrook
 Entertainment reporter
 Big Brothers Big Sisters
 Watch life-changing

campaign
 2014 CLOSE-UP 16
 Lego breaks the mould in ad takeover
 The brand has achieved a movie-style impact through a mixture of creativity and collaboration. David Wilding says
 Work debrief
 I was one of those moments where you have to step and remind yourself that you get paid to do this job. Adam was day in Concept Garden. The brands and the

Bleeding Cool
 Marvel Star Wars Film
 Doctor Who GotG SHIELD
 Amazing Spider-Man
 Fox Marvelverse Avengers
 Home About Contact Contributors Magazine Retailers BC Events/Live Blog
 Serenity
 LEAVES ON THE WIND
 WHERE'S SERENITY?
 Watch: ITV Just Aired This Whole Ad Break In Which The Ads Were Recreated In Lego
 Posted on February 5, 2014 by Brandon Conroy
 One of the prime time ad breaks on ITV tonight was filled with re-made commercials, all recreated in Lego animation. This has required Lego Lenny Henry, Lego Daniel Rigby and Lego Yinnie Jones.
 FREE

ADWEEK
 THE PRESS TELEVISION TECHNOLOGY ADVERTISING & BRANDING ADWEEK VIDEO CHANNEL
 ADWEEK THE BEST AND WORST OF ADVERTISING
 Entire Ad Break Is Made of Lego in Delightful Stunt for Toy Company's Movie
 Four British ads remade almost shot for shot by Tim Nudd
 February 10, 2014, 1:52 PM EST

The world's first ad break made entirely from Lego is set to be screened by ITV. Ads for Premier Inn and BT have been given the building-block treatment to help Time Warner promote its Lego film, which opens next week. And Lego people are taking

DID IT ENGAGE THE INCREMENTAL ADULT AUDIENCE WE NEEDED?

Yes. In independent research by YouGov, it was described as the best performing ad break they've tested to date.

Respondents rated it 14% more enjoyable than the average ad break (the average ad in the LEGO break scoring 63 enjoyment points versus YouGov's benchmark average of 56)

We also now know that re-making an ad in LEGO makes it an average of 19% more enjoyable than its live action original (scoring 10 points higher than the originals' average of 53, see right)

The screenshot shows a YouGov article page. The header includes the YouGov logo, navigation links for 'HOME', 'PUBLIC OPINION', 'OPIGRAM', 'MY YOUNGOV', and 'ABOUT', and a search bar. The article title is 'Lego adverts hit home with consumers' by John Spencer, dated March 19, 2014. It features social media sharing icons and a photograph of Lego characters. The text discusses how Lego-themed ads outperformed original versions in terms of viewer engagement.

Average enjoyment ratings

Viewers rated the adverts on a scale of 0-100 as they watched. The rating indicates their average level of enjoyment for each of the adverts.

As an indicator of individual performance our benchmark overall average rating for all ads we have measured is 56. All the Lego adverts are rated above the benchmark average.

Advert	Average enjoyment
	Original	Lego
British Heart Foundation	67	68
Confused.com	48	61
BT	46	61
Premier Inn	49	61
Total	53	63

DID THAT ADULT AUDIENCE GO AND SEE THE MOVIE?

Yes.

The LEGO Movie outperformed the average UK ticket sales for 15-34 year olds by 8%. Not bad for 'a kids film'.

Source: Film Monitor

YOUNG ADULT
TICKET SALES
+8% vs.
CATEGORY

DID THE BREAK DRIVE TICKET SALES?

Yes.

Post-launch tracking showed that The LEGO Movie ad break influenced an incremental 5% of the opening week's box office revenue, returning Warner Bros. £5.96 of ticket sales for every £1 they spent on the break.

Source: Nielsen

£5.96:£1 ROMI

The movie ended 2014 at No.1 in the UK box office charts, meaning it wasn't just the best performing kids film of the year, it was the best performing movie of ANY kind.

It was an amazing result for a completely new franchise launch in a category which is traditionally dominated by adaptations and sequels.

To paraphrase the movie's Oscar-nominated song...

...Everything was Awesome.

NEWS VIDEO PEOPLE VOICES SPORT TECH LIFE PROPERTY ARTS + ENTS TRAVEL MONEY INDYBEST STUDENT

Art + Photography / Architecture / Music + Classical / Films + TV & Radio / Theatre + Dance + Comedy + Books + Puzzles and Games

Art + Ents > Film > News

The Lego Movie named highest-grossing film of 2014 at the UK box office

The Warner Bros movie beat The Inbetweeners 2 to take the title

DAISY WYATT | Tuesday 30 December 2014

sign in subscribe search jobs dating more - UK edition -

theguardian

Winner of the Pulitzer prize

UK world sport football opinion culture economy lifestyle fashion environment tech money travel home > culture > film tv & radio music games books art & design stage classical

The Lego Movie

The Lego Movie block-busts UK box office in 2014

Phil Lord and Christopher Miller's smart Lego cash-in beats The Inbetweeners 2's Australian jaunt for No 1 place

Our top 10 films of 2014: The Lego Movie

Ben Child

Wednesday 31 December 2014 11:48 GMT

Shares 121 Comments 9

Advertisement

There's always time to listen.

audible.co.uk Free Trial

BBC Sign in News Sport Weather iPlayer TV Rad

NEWS ENTERTAINMENT & ARTS

Home World UK England N. Ireland Scotland Wales Business Politics Health Education Sci/Env

6 January 2015 Last updated at 12:24

Lego Movie was top UK and Ireland film of 2014

A follow-up to The Lego Movie is due out in 2018

Animated comedy The Lego Movie was the top film in the UK and Ireland in 2014, although box office takings were down almost 3% on the previous year.

Related Stories

Film in 2015: A look ahead

The Lego Movie made £34.3m, while the final Hobbit instalment took

“We knew from the start that we had a great idea that would really elevate the campaign but the complexity of making it happen was astounding.

The ambition, co-ordination and sheer will to make it happen was astounding.

However, it delivered everything we hoped it would. People talked about it, people tweeted about it, people viewed it online and ultimately it convinced people to go to the cinema to watch the film - helping make The LEGO Movie the highest grossing movie of the year.”

Alex Lewis, VP & Director of Marketing, Film, at Warner Bros. UK